

Walking around has never been this quiet

by Hensley Banzales

The pedestrian lines more white without a trace that says it longs for footsteps.
Old and new buildings remain stationary,
park emptier than the common nights.
Window lights lift us like flightless sparrows.